

ABSTRACT

A system for converting stored electronic content (such as email) to an audible speech signal which is then transmitted such that the content can be received by a receiving device and output as intelligible synthetic speech. A second embodiment of the device allows for a graphic/video element to be included in addition to the audio component.